SM, PH,

Suddenly I have really expert and literate Russian-English translation services available, someone with big professional skill and an interest in the assassination. This person is willing to do independent translations from the Russian of those various writings of which some of us have some doubts.

I'm deeply pre-occupied with preparing for being a lawyer on Thursday and caring for an injured wife)getting along well) and doing some of what she customairly does, so my mind is largely blank on what we'd like so translated. Therefore I write to ask for a list, in order of priority, of what you'd recommend we get translated independently.

I think that is there are any untranslated CDs, we might want to branch into them. I presume neither of you has anything like this.

If either makes any recommendations, I'd like them as soon as conveniently possible so I can get this person started. It can be in terms of CEs, volumes and pages, etc., for this person will have the 26 available.

If there are those translations about which you are dubious and would prefer an immediate translation or evaluation, let me know. I think that when Marina was a witness, the translators disagreed on what she said, as they translated it.

If I do not hear from either of you by the time this can begin, I'll start with the address book and then do the "Walker" cookbook letter.

In haste,
